PLAINTIFFS' OPPOSITION TO DEFENDANT NEVADA SECRETARY OF STATE'S MOTION TO DISMISS AND REPLY IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

I. INTRODUCTION

The arguments in the Secretary of State’s Consolidated Opposition to Plaintiffs’ Motion for Preliminary Injunction and Motion to Dismiss (the “Consolidated Opposition and Motion”) (ECF No. 34) are premised on a mischaracterization of the nature and scope of this case, as well as a misunderstanding of the applicable legal standards. The Court should deny the Secretary of State’s Motion to Dismiss because, contrary of the Secretary of State’s assertions, Plaintiffs have stated viable claims under the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution, Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act (“VRA”), and the Guarantee Clause in Article IV, Section 4 of the Constitution. Further, nothing in the Secretary of State’s Consolidated Opposition and Motion undermines Plaintiffs’ showing that they are entitled to a preliminary injunction. For reasons set forth below, the Court should deny the Secretary of State’s Motion to Dismiss and grant Plaintiffs’ Motion for Preliminary Injunction.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

A. Motion to Dismiss

A motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) tests the legal sufficiency of a complaint, which needs only plead “enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.” Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 547 (2007). At this stage, courts must accept “all factual allegations [] as true and construe the pleadings in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party.” Friedman v. AARP, Inc., 855 F.3d 1047, 1051 (9th Cir. 2017). Further, all reasonable inferences must be drawn in favor of the plaintiff. Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Sol., 513 F.3d 1038, 1043 (9th Cir. 2008). Dismissal is proper only “if it appears beyond doubt that the non-movant can prove no set of facts to support its claims.” Ass’n for Los Angeles Deputy Sheriffs v. Cty. of Los Angeles, 648 F.3d 986, 991 (9th Cir. 2011).

B. Preliminary Injunction

A court should grant a preliminary injunction if the plaintiff shows: (1) “he is likely to succeed on the merits”; (2) “he is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief”; (3) “the balance of equities tips in his favor”; and (4) “an injunction is in the public interest.” Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 20 (2008). A preliminary injunction is also appropriate when “a plaintiff raises ‘serious questions’ as to the merits and ‘the balance of hardships tips sharply in [plaintiff’s] favor,’” so long as a plaintiff still establishes irreparable harm and that the injunction is in the public interest. Puente Ariz. v. Arpaio, 821 F.3d 1098, 1103, n. 4 (9th Cir. 2016) (alteration in original) (quoting All. for the Wild Rockies v. Cottrell, 632 F.3d 1127, 1135 (9th Cir. 2011)).

III. ARGUMENT

A. The Secretary of State’s Motion to Dismiss Should be Denied.

1. The Secretary of State Misconstrues Plaintiffs’ Claims

As an initial matter, the Secretary of State’s arguments for dismissal of Plaintiffs’ claims, in addition to failing on the legal merits, are premised on a mistaken account of the scope and nature of Plaintiffs’ claims.

First, the Secretary of State wrongly insists that “[e]very criticism [Plaintiffs] level against this prospective recall applies, by definition, to every by-the-book recall” and, therefore, “a victory for Plaintiffs would effectively mean that all recall elections are always unlawful.” (ECF No. 24 at 2, 4). These statements plainly misconstrue the nature and scope of Plaintiffs’ claims. Plaintiffs do not challenge any and all recalls as the Secretary of State insists. Instead, Plaintiffs are challenging the scope and consequences of Nevada’s broad recall laws only as applied to the current recall efforts in Senate Districts 5 and 6, under the specific circumstances here: when recalls are used for purely political purposes, to force an unjustified do-over of an indisputably legitimate election, in the absence of any wrongdoing by the elected official or any other cause for recall. Under such circumstances, a recall election serves no legitimate state or public interest. Indeed, “[p]olitical patronage is not a legitimate state interest,” much less a compelling or important one. Graves v. McElderry, 946 F. Supp. 1569, 1581 (W.D. Okl. 1996) (citing Rutan v. Republican Party of Ill., 497 U.S. 62 (1990)); see also San Francisco Cnty. Democratic Cent. Comm. v. March Fong EU, 826 F.2d 814, 831 (9th Cir. 1987) (“[A] state has no interest in [regulations] . . . for the purpose of helping [political parties] win or retain voter support.”).

1        Second, the Secretary of State argues that “[t]he types of burdens that each Plaintiff claims 2 to face in participating in this prospective recall election are precisely those faced by every 3 Nevadan elector.” (ECF No. 34 at 1). Even if that statement were true, it is entirely irrelevant for 4 the purposes of Plaintiffs’ First and Fourteenth Amendment claim, which does not require 5 Plaintiffs to establish that the burdens they face are different from, or more severe than, burdens
 6 faced by other voters. (See Plaintiffs’ Motion for Preliminary Injunction, ECF No. 17 at 6-11 7 (discussing the Anderson-Burdick standard and applying it to the facts in this case)). Indeed, 8 where, as here, there is “not a legitimate state interest, the Court must hold there is no burden 9 upon [] citizens’ First and Fourteenth Amendment rights which would be justified by” the 10 application of the Nevada’s recall laws to the recall efforts at issue. See Graves, 946 F. Supp. at 11 1581 (emphasis added). Further, the fact that other voters may face the same burdens is not a 12 defense against a claim under Section 2 of the VRA if minority voters, under the totality of the 13 circumstances, are disparately impacted. In a Section 2 disparate impact analysis, “the Court must 14 account for both the likelihood that minority voters will face a given burden and their relative 15 ability to overcome the burden,” as well as acknowledge the “reality that a burden that may be 16 insignificant to one demographic may be great for another.” Sanchez v. Cegavske, 214 F. Supp.
 17 3d 961, 972 (D. Nev. 2016).

18        Finally, the Secretary of State claims that “a recall election is just that—an election—and 19 as such inevitably pervaded by partisan preference.” (ECF No. 34 at 4). This statement is 20 misguided. Though elections themselves are partisan events in which voters pick and choose 21 candidates based on their preferences, partisan or otherwise, whether the results of a particular 22 election is allowed to stand and whether a particular election, here, a special recall election, is 23 held at all should not be driven solely by partisan interests, without any regard for the resulting 24 consequences for voters and disruption to representative democracy.

25                    2. Plaintiffs Have Stated a Claim under the First and Fourteenth 26                    Amendments

27                    The First and Fourteenth Amendments prohibit state and local election laws and practices 28

1 that unduly burden the right to vote in the absence of a sufficient, countervailing state interest. To 2 resolve these challenges, courts apply the Anderson/Burdick test, which “is a sliding scale test, 3 where the more severe the burden, the more compelling the state’s interest must be.” Ariz. Green 4 Party v. Reagan, 838 F.3d 983, 988 (9th Cir. 2016). The Secretary of State does not dispute the 5 applicable legal standard. And more significantly, the Secretary does not, because she cannot, 6 dispute any of Plaintiffs’ allegations regarding the burdens they would face in having their 7 previously-cast votes nullified and in having to participate in a special, off-cycle recall election.
8 (See Compl., ECF No. 1 at 10-15; see also Motion for Preliminary Injunction, ECF No. 17 at 7-9 22). Instead, the Secretary of State admits that Plaintiffs would face “relative burdens,” including 10 transportation and time costs, in order to participate in a recall election. (See ECF No. 34 at 8).

11 Further, though the Secretary of State takes issue with Plaintiffs’ argument that application 12 of Nevada’s recall laws here does not further any state interest, she identifies no specific 13 legitimate state interest that would justify the challenged application of Nevada’s recall laws. The 14 Secretary of State only alludes vaguely to a historical purpose in allowing citizens who “find that 15 officials have come to disserve them . . . [to] dismiss this agent of their power.” (ECF. No. 34 at 16 8). Indeed, the Secretary of State goes on to assert that “the state’s interest in recalls . . . never 17 extends beyond this high level of generality.” (Id.) Even crediting this assertion as a legitimate 18 purpose for Nevada’s recall laws generally, it says nothing about what, if any, interests the state 19 has in the broad scope of those laws and their application to the circumstances challenged here—20 where there is no justification or cause for the recall besides partisan political advantage. Indeed, 21 the very purpose identified by the Secretary of State suggests the existence of some change in 22 circumstance underlying any need for citizens to dismiss elected officials of their power mid-23 term, and the Secretary of State does not dispute that no such circumstances exist here. Moreover, 24 the Secretary of State makes no effort to explain how any legitimate state interest weighs against 25 and justifies the resulting burdens on the right to vote. See Burdick v. Takushi, 504 U.S. 428, 434 26 (1992) (requiring that courts “tak[e] into consideration ‘the extent to which [the state’s] interests 27 make it necessary to burden the plaintiff’s rights.’”) (quoting Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S.

1 780, 789 (1983)).

2 The Secretary of State's arguments are plainly insufficient to meet her burden under Rule 3 12(b)(6), which requires that the Court accept "all factual allegations [] as true and construe the 4 pleadings in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party." Friedman, 855 F.3d at 1051.
5 Indeed, dismissal is proper only "if it appears beyond doubt that the non-movant can prove no set 6 of facts to support its claims." Ass'n for Los Angeles Deputy Sheriffs, 648 F.3d at 991. The 7 Secretary of State does not come close to making this necessary showing and her motion to 8 dismiss Plaintiffs' First and Fourteenth Amendment claim should be denied.

9 3. Plaintiffs Have Stated a Claim under Section 2 of the VRA

10 The Secretary of State's argument that Plaintiffs have not stated a claim under Section 2 of 11 the VRA similarly fails.

12 First, the Secretary of State argues that Plaintiffs have failed to allege state action serving 13 as a basis of liability under Section 2 of the VRA. (ECF No. 34 at 8-11). This argument, however, 14 is based on an erroneous understanding of Plaintiffs' claims and the applicable law. Section 2 of 15 the VRA prohibits the enforcement of a "voting qualification[,], prerequisite[,], or standard, 16 practice, or procedure" that has the purpose or result of denying or abridging the right to vote on 17 account of race, color, or membership in a language minority group. 52 U.S.C. § 10301(a).
18 Nothing in the statutory language carves out recalls from the reach of the VRA, which the 19 Supreme Court has stated should be read to "provide[] 'the broadest possible scope.'" Chisom v.
20 Roemer, 501 U.S. 380, 403 (1991). In any case, here, Plaintiffs are challenging government 21 action, including the issuance of a call for a recall election, the holding of a recall election, and 22 the removal of Senators Woodhouse and Cannizzaro from office prior to the completion of a 23 normal four year-term. Courts have held that such actions constitute "standard[s], practice[s], or 24 procedure[s]" that are "imposed or applied by any State or political subdivision" for the purposes 25 of the VRA. Id. at 391. See, e.g., Henderson v. Harris, 804 F. Supp. 288, 293 (M.D. Ala. 1992) 26 (holding that the "calling of a special election was a change in a standard, practice or procedure 27 with respect to voting" under the VRA); Cartagena v. Crew, No. CV-96-3399 (CPS), 1996 U.S.

1 Dist. LEXIS 20178 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 10, 1996) (holding that the suspension of elected board 2 members in favor of appointed trustees could constitute a voting practice or procedure under the 3 VRA).

4 Further, Plaintiffs here are not challenging any private parties' decision to "research[], 5 writ[e], file[], circulate[], and vot[e] on" a particular recall effort. (See ECF No. 34 at 8). Thus, the 6 situation here is clearly distinguishable from the cases the Secretary of State cites—Padilla v.
7 Lever, 463 F.3d 1046 (9th Cir. 2006), Montero v. Meyer, 861 F.2d 603 (10th Cir. 1988), and 8 Delgado v. Smith, 861 F.2d 1489 (11th Cir. 1988)—each of which involve disputes regarding the 9 specific documents created and circulated by recall and initiative proponents. In Padilla, for 10 example, Plaintiffs alleged that defendants violated a different provision of the VRA, 42 U.S.C. § 11 1973aa-1a, which requires that, in certain states with substantial language minority populations of 12 voting age, the state must provide election materials in the applicable minority languages, as well 13 as in English. The court held, however, that the challenged recall petition materials were not 14 subject to this specific provision of the VRA because they were not "provided" by the state and 15 county defendants. Padilla, 463 F.3d at 1050; see also Montero, 861 F.2d at 609; Delgado, 861 16 F.2d at 1497. This conclusion relied on the fact that the statutory provision at issue specifically 17 limited its translation requirements to election materials that the state or political subdivision itself 18 "provides." Padilla, 463 F.3d at 1050. No comparable restriction exists in Section 2 of the VRA 19 or the constitutional provisions at issue in this case.

20 Second, the Secretary of State argues that "Plaintiffs' [VRA] theory was specifically 21 rejected by the Fifth Circuit in 1983" (ECF No. 34 at 9) in Smith v. Winter, 717 F.2d 191 (5th Cir.
22 1983). That case, however, is easily distinguishable on multiple grounds:

- 23 • First, Smith involved a facial challenge to a recall statute that specifically required cause, 24 unlike the Nevada recall laws challenged here. Further, Plaintiffs challenge only the 25 application of the Nevada recall laws to the recalls in the Senate Districts at issue here, for 26 which there is no cause for recall besides partisan political advantage. See id.
- 27 • Second, the plaintiff in Smith did "not allege that the conduct complained of has the 28 purpose or effect of denying or abridging minorities' rights to vote." Id. at 197. In contrast, here Plaintiffs have alleged and provided an Expert Report, along with other supporting materials, showing that the application of Nevada's recall laws in Senate

Districts 5 and 6 has the effect of denying minorities equal electoral opportunities. (Compl., ECF No. 1 at 12-28; Motion for Preliminary Injunction, ECF No. 17 at 11-24).

- Third, the plaintiff in Smith was the recalled official himself, whom the court held did not have a right to remain in office. Smith, 717 F.2d at 191. In reaching this conclusion, the Smith court relied on the fact that “[t]he plaintiffs point us to no authority or rationale to support [their] interpretation of the right to vote, and we find none.” Id. at 198. Here, in contrast, Plaintiffs have pointed to many cases that support a violation of the VRA, many of which were decided decades after Smith and track the evolution of the law. (Complaint, ECF No. 1 at 12-15; Motion for Preliminary Injunction, ECF No. 17 at 12-14).
- Finally, contrary to the Secretary of State’s suggestion, nowhere in Smith does the court carve out recall elections from the reach of the VRA; in fact, Smith expressly left the door open to such claims. Smith, 717 F.2d at 197 (“We do not intimate [ ] that allegations of discriminatory misconduct of a recall process could never give rise to a claim under the Voting Rights Act.”); see also Cartagena, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20178, at *27 (“Moreover, the Winter court acknowledges that under certain circumstances, allegations of discriminatory misconduct of a recall or removal process may give rise to a claim for voting rights violations.”).

Third, the Secretary of State misconstrues what is required under the Senate Factors and the role of those factors in proving a violation of Section 2 of the VRA. Most notably, the Secretary of State seems to argue that the fact that other states have a history of discrimination against African-Americans and other minorities somehow negates or condones Nevada’s history of such discrimination. In particular, she states that “virtually everything in Plaintiffs’ account of failures in Nevada to honor the rights of minority residents[,] . . . Nevada has in common with every state, from Maryland to California.” (ECF No. 34 at 10). This statement is irrelevant, however, as the VRA does not require that the state be the only one to have committed such discrimination. It defies common sense and the Secretary of State points to no authority suggesting that the fact that other states also have a history of racial discrimination somehow excuses Nevada’s history of such discrimination or otherwise makes that history immaterial for purposes of the VRA’s totality-of-the-circumstances analysis. Further, in baldly asserting that “the sole nexus between [ ] past events and this future recall is their presence on Nevada soil,” the Secretary of State completely ignores Plaintiffs’ cited evidence, including the Expert Report of David Damore, on how Nevada’s historical and ongoing discrimination has resulted in a host of socioeconomic disparities for minorities, including in terms of poverty, employment, education, and home ownership, all of which make the burdens of having to vote again in an off-cycle special election more difficult to overcome. (See Complaint, ECF No. 1 at 12028; Motion for Preliminary Injunction, ECF No. 17 at 11-22).

4. Plaintiffs Have Stated a Claim under the Guarantee Clause

The Secretary of State argues that Plaintiffs have not stated a valid Guarantee Clause claim because such claims are not justiciable, citing Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Company v. Oregon, 223 U.S. 118, 141 (1912). (See ECF No. 34 at 11). However, this argument fails because it ignores subsequent pronouncements from the Supreme Court on the political question doctrine. Specifically, Baker v. Carr detailed six factors that may render a case nonjusticiable under the political question doctrine:

[A] textually demonstrable constitutional commitment of the issue to a coordinate political department; or a lack of judicially discoverable and manageable standards for resolving it; or the impossibility of deciding without an initial policy determination of a kind clearly for nonjudicial discretion; or the impossibility of a court's undertaking independent resolution without expressing lack of the respect due coordinate branches of government; or an unusual need for unquestioning adherence to a political decision already made; or the potentiality of embarrassment from multifarious pronouncements by various departments on one question.

369 U.S. 186, 217 (1962). “Unless one of these formulations is inextricable from the case at bar, there should be no dismissal for non-justiciability on the ground of a political question’s presence.” Id. (emphasis added). Indeed, the Baker Court explicitly rejected a categorical justiciability bar for Guarantee Clause claims, explaining that its prior cases considering “Guaranty Clause claims involve those elements which define a ‘political question,’” referencing the six factors above, “and for that reason and no other, they are nonjusticiable.” Id. at 218 (emphasis added). “[N]onjusticiability of such claims has nothing to do with their touching upon matters of state governmental organization.” Id. Further, the Supreme Court in New York v. United States again stated that “not all claims under the Guarantee Clause present nonjusticiable political questions.” 505 U.S. 144, 185 (1992); see also Kerr v. Hickenlooper, 744 F.3d 1156, 1173-1 (10th Cir. 2014) (holding a Guarantee Clause claim justiciable in challenge to a voter-adopted state constitutional amendment that required advance approval of citizens of any new 1 tax), cert. granted, judgment vacated on other grounds, 135 S. Ct. 2927 (2015).<sup>1</sup>

2 B. Plaintiffs Are Entitled to a Preliminary Injunction

3 For the reasons discussed in Section III.A. above and in Plaintiffs’ Motion for Preliminary 4 Injunction (ECF No. 17 at 22-24), Plaintiffs are likely to succeed on the merits of their claim.
 5 Plaintiffs also meet the other requirements for a preliminary injunction. Here, Plaintiffs are likely 6 to suffer to irreparable harm absent a preliminary injunction, including having their previously 7 cast votes nullified and being forced to bear the heightened burdens for voting again in a special 8 recall election to maintain support for their Senator of choice or not being able to vote at all in 9 that election.<sup>2</sup> Further, as a general matter, particularly when voting rights are at issue, “[t]he 10 public interest and the balance of the equities favor ‘prevent[ing] the violation of a party’s 11 constitutional rights.’” Ariz. Dream Act Coal. v. Brewer, 818 F.3d 901, 920 (9th Cir. 2016) 12 (citation omitted).

13 The Secretary of State’s only response to Plaintiffs arguments as to irreparable harm is to 14 state that the risk of that harm has been present since Nevada enacted its recall laws nearly a

<sup>1</sup> California v. United States, 104 F.3d 1086, 1091 (9th Cir. 1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 806 17 (1997), the one Ninth Circuit decision cited by the Secretary of State that post-dates Baker and 18 New York, is devoid of any analysis and ignores the six factors of nonjusticiability laid out in Baker as well as the Baker Court’s clear rejection of a categorical bar to Guarantee Clause claims.

19 <sup>2</sup> As Plaintiffs explain in their Motion to Stay the November 29, 2017 Hearing Pending State 20 Court Legal Sufficiency Ruling (ECF No. 38), the filing of a state court complaint on November 21 13, 2017 challenging the legal sufficiency of the petition to recall Nevada Senator Joyce 22 Woodhouse (District 5) stays any further proceedings on the recall petition, including any call for 23 a recall election. Though Nevada Revised Statutes § 306.040(5) required the court to “set the 24 matter for hearing not later than 30 days after the complaint is filed,” on November 16, 2017, the 25 state court set a hearing date of December 19, 2017. Thus, the state court stay will remain in 26 effect at least until that date. Should the court affirm the legal sufficiency of the recall petition, 27 however, the Registrar is required by statute to issue a call for a recall election and the recall election itself must occur within 30 days of the call. Id.; Nev. Const. Art. 2, § 9. Given this 28 timeframe, in the absence of preliminary relief on an expedited schedule, Plaintiffs are unlikely to be able to seek relief from this Court in a timely manner after the state court rules on the legal sufficiency of recall petition. See Michigan State Chamber of Commerce v. Austin, 788 F.2d 1178, 1179 (6th Cir. 1986) (concluding that forcing plaintiffs seeking to challenge contribution limits to ballot initiative measures to wait for an initiative to qualify to bring suit would not provide adequate opportunity for judicial review given condensed statutory timeframe (49 days) between certification of the initiative to the election).

1 century ago. The Secretary of State cites to no authority, however, suggesting that the passage of 2 time can excuse violations of the right to vote and such a suggestion defies common sense.

3 Further, the Secretary of State's suggestion that Plaintiffs' requested relief would deny 4 other Nevadans the right to vote assumes that a recall election in the Senate Districts at issue—in 5 the absence of any cause for recall—is lawful in the first instance and ignores the preliminary 6 nature of Plaintiffs' requested relief. Plaintiffs are simply asking the Court to preserve the status 7 quo and prevent the potential violation of their rights while the Court resolves the legal questions 8 presented in this case. Absent preliminary relief, if the Court later finds Plaintiffs' claims 9 meritorious, "once the [recall] election occurs, there can be no do-over and no redress" to the 10 voters, including Plaintiffs. League of Women Voters of N.C. v. North Carolina, 769 F.3d 224, 11 247 (4th Cir. 2014). Accordingly, consideration of the public interest and the balance of equities 12 favors the granting of a preliminary injunction.<sup>3</sup>

24 <sup>3</sup> The "intolerable consequences" that the Secretary of State describes (see ECF No. 34 at 12-25 13) are overblown, couching in catastrophic terms the factual inquiry and totality-of-the-26 circumstances analysis that courts routinely conduct when evaluating the types of claims at issue 27 here. In any case, the Secretary of State provides no explanation as to how or why those 28 allegations are relevant at the court's consideration of her Motion to Dismiss or Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Injunction.

1 IV. CONCLUSION

2 For the reasons set forth above, the Court should deny the Secretary of State's Motion to 3 Dismiss and grant Plaintiffs' request for a preliminary injunction.
